Non Print Legal Deposit Avoiding the black hole

From Regulation to Review.....and Beyond

Linda Arnold-Stratford
Legal Deposit Libraries Liaison manager

Where has NPLD come from?

The legal deposit act 2003 includes non-print works

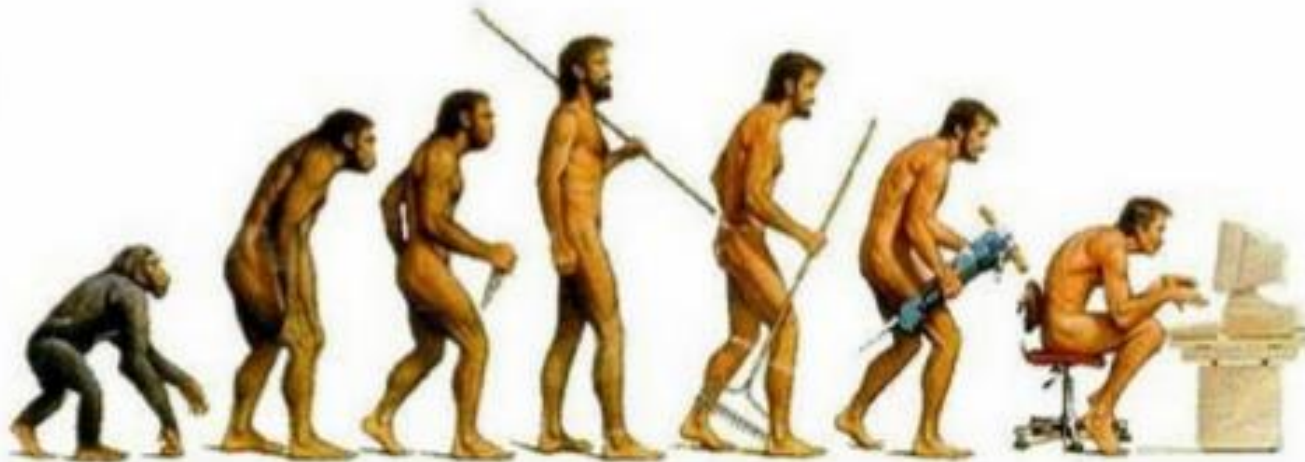

Ten years later in April 2013 the regulations come into force

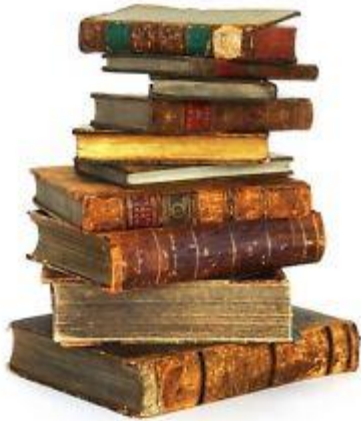

The Content Explosion

“Every two days we create as much content as from the dawn of man up to the year 2003.”

- Eric Schmidt, Google, in 2010

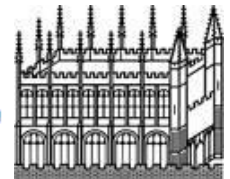

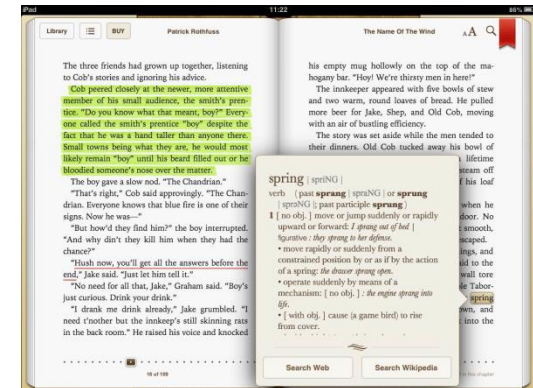

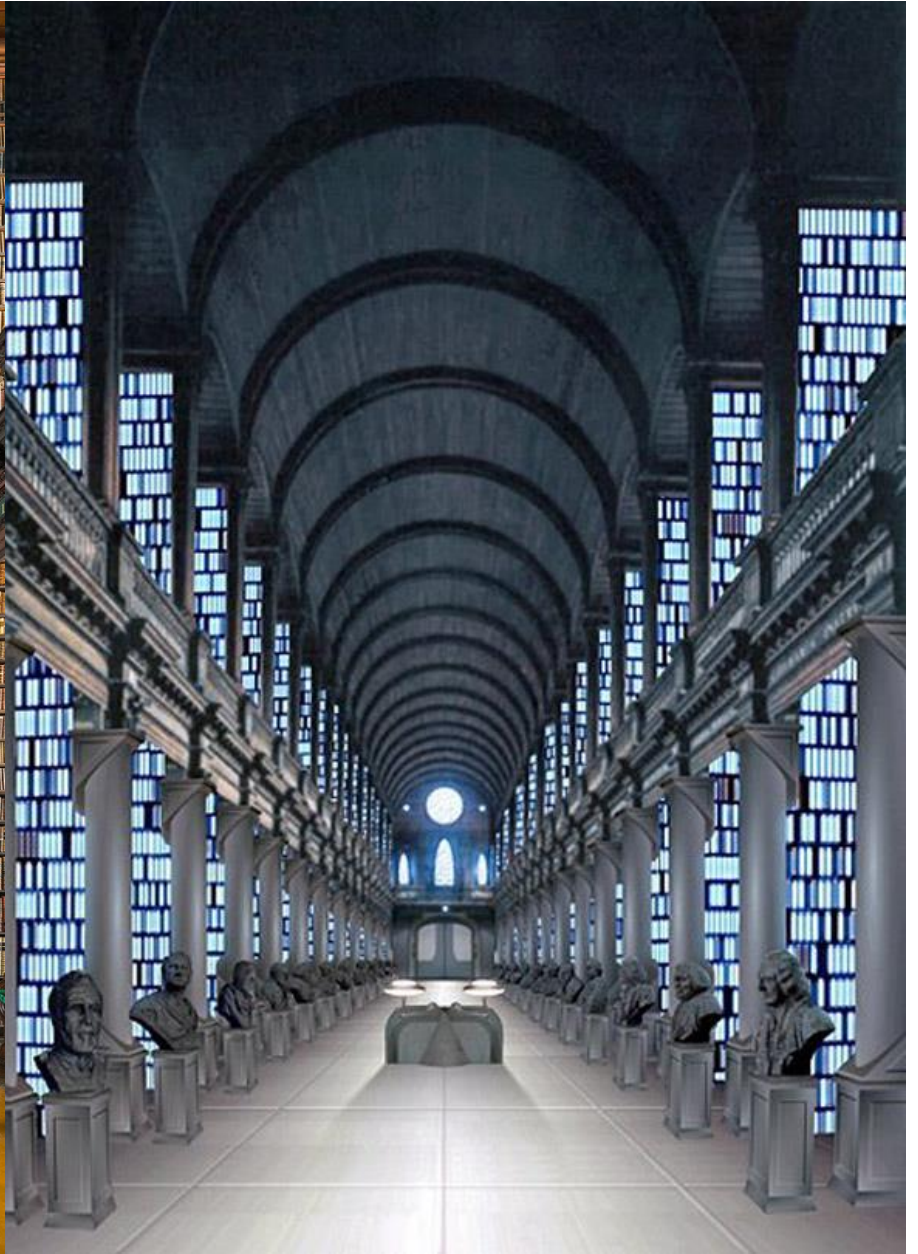

What have we achieved so far?

Legal deposit for print has been in force for over 400 years, we still have problems collecting and processing that material.

In just 3 years we have achieved access to content which can be very complex, be in diverse formats and is forever changing.

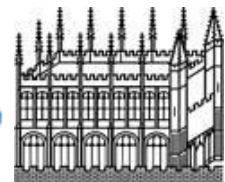

Metadata, Access and Printing

Metadata can be harvested from the BL by all legal deposit Libraries.

Each LDL now has the ability to access eJournals, eBooks and Web Archive.

Currently different levels of access and printing is available across the LDLs dependent upon local infrastructure.

What next?

Non-standard formats.
Including digital mapping and born digital sheet music; emerging formats

Lloyd's
Register

Digital Mapping

Currently only collecting about 10% of the known universe for digital maps.

Plan to use existing access methods but expand to include other mapping formats.

Can cope with the standard formats.

Born Digital Sheet Music

More complex than digital maps since we don't already have a platform.

Engagement with the publishers is good although many didn't know they were liable.

Emerging formats

This is both the known Universe and the unknown.

These publication formats may be transient and complex in nature

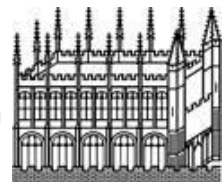

At high risk of falling into the black hole.

Review of the Regulations

To conclude:

Lets celebrate what we have achieved so far and plan for a future we know and a future we have not yet envisaged.
